Press Release

Heath Henderson to Serve as Clark Regional Wastewater District Engineer

Vancouver, WA – The Clark Regional Wastewater District (District) has announced the promotion of Heath Henderson, PE, to the position of District Engineer, effective April 16, 2019. Since joining the District on September 24, 2018, Heath has spent time learning operations and getting to know staff within the Engineering department, while functioning as the Capital Program Manager. The promotion to District Engineer, an important role at the District, will leverage his leadership and managerial experience. In this capacity, Heath will have the opportunity to provide a positive impact on the community, by fostering relationships with stakeholders and by delivering strategic infrastructure investments in the local and regional wastewater systems. As the District Engineer, Heath will be involved with regulatory and Board engagement, policy and program development, and he will oversee all operations within engineering. The position was previously held by Robin Krause, PE, who, after ten years at the District, has elected to return to private sector consulting work.

“Heath is a performance-minded and thoughtful leader with more than 20 years of engineering and management experience,” said John Peterson, General Manager. “We’re excited for the leadership he brings to our engineering team.” Heath holds a BS Degree in Civil Engineering and is a licensed Professional Engineer. Prior to joining the District, Heath was the Public Works Director for Clark County. As District Engineer, he will oversee the planning, design and delivery of capital and restoration and replacement projects. Over the next 6 years, the District is programming to deliver $120 million in improvements to the regional wastewater system.
